Chapter 87: The Stability of the Four Clones' Inner Worlds

After the creation of their inner worlds, the four clones of the Divine Triad—Sung Jin-Woo's first and second clones, and Sung Su-Ho's first and second clones—took swift and decisive measures to ensure the stability and harmony of these vast realms. Their careful planning and foresight ensured that these worlds remained free from chaos and internal strife, securing a peaceful existence for the lesser Absolutes and their emissaries.

---

1. No Conflicts Within the Inner Worlds

The four clones, having learned from the past, were keenly aware of the importance of maintaining order within their inner worlds. They quickly established a sense of balance and control, preventing any internal conflicts from arising. The lesser Absolutes, though immensely powerful, were bound by the will of their creators, and the realms they inhabited were shaped by this guiding principle.

Each clone used their profound wisdom to ensure the well-being of their inner worlds, using their powers to pacify any potential threats to the peace. The ancient inhabitants—whether the Eclipsians, Eternal Dragons, or other primal beings—were given a role to play in maintaining harmony within their respective realms. They were encouraged to form alliances, rather than factions, and to work towards the collective good of the realm.

By emphasizing unity and cooperation, the clones ensured that the Umbralis, Draconis Eternus, Umbra Vexus, and Draconis Aetheris were free from the internal strife that could otherwise destabilize their worlds. There were no rivalries, no factions seeking to overthrow their rulers, and no scheming for power.

---

2. The Scepters of Dominion: The Seal of Absolute Control

To further cement the stability of their inner worlds and to eliminate any potential threat of rebellion, betrayal, or war, the four clones granted their emissaries the Scepters of Dominion. These powerful tools, a gift from the Divine Triad, carried with them the immense power of control and authority, ensuring that no individual within the realms could act against the will of the clones.

The Scepters of Dominion held dominion over the entire realm and all its inhabitants, forcing absolute loyalty to the will of the creator. With these scepters, the emissaries were empowered to maintain peace, resolve disputes, and suppress any forces that might seek to sow discord. The power of the scepters was unparalleled, making them an unbreakable tool to safeguard the unity of the inner worlds.

As the emissaries wielded their scepters, the clones ensured that there was no room for seeds of rebellion, betrayal, or war. The world was structured in a way that everyone within it understood the importance of unity and the consequences of defying the ruling authority. The scepters served as both a symbol and a tool of absolute control, ensuring that their worlds remained undisturbed and harmonious.

---

3. Time Flow: One Day Outside, One Year Inside

Another crucial element that contributed to the success of these inner worlds was the synchronized flow of time between the outer world and the realms within. The clones, being capable of altering the very fabric of existence, established a unique time-flow system for their inner worlds, ensuring that time flowed differently within their domains.

For every one day that passed in the outer world, a full year passed within the inner worlds. This time differential allowed for rapid growth and evolution of the lesser Absolutes and their armies, giving them ample time to expand and build their forces without any significant impact on the outside world. The clones could develop their inner realms, nurture their forces, and complete any necessary tasks without having to worry about time constraints.

This time manipulation also ensured that the four clones could continue their work on a long-term scale, overseeing the progress of their inner worlds and their emissaries without the pressure of the limited time of the outside world. The clones could achieve great feats of creation and control, knowing that within their inner realms, they had all the time they needed.

---

4. A Future Free of Conflict

Thanks to the clones' careful planning and use of the Scepters of Dominion, the four inner worlds remain peaceful and well-ordered. There is no fear of betrayal, rebellion, or chaos—only a united front of lesser Absolutes working under the watchful eyes of their emissaries. The time flows in harmony with the outer world, and everything within these realms is aligned with the will of the creators.

As the four clones continue to oversee their worlds, they remain confident that the peace they have established will endure. With their foresight, the power of the Scepters of Dominion, and their unwavering commitment to order, there is little threat to the stability of the realms. The inner worlds are thriving, and the future looks brighter than ever.

With no conflicts to speak of and time itself on their side, the four clones stand as the supreme rulers of their inner worlds, secure in their dominion, knowing that their creations will continue to grow and evolve as they see fit.